"Trinity has got a very interesting history of buildings which reflected the particular time in which these buildings were built and we can very clearly understand that each of those groups of people who were building were looking at what was going on around the world and somehow the buildings that came up reflected the thinking of architecture at that time. In that way it is very much a Trinity tradition, you don't remain in the past you look to the future. Respite finem we always said. And that's really what has been happening in the building history of Trinity. So, I think what we are trying to do now is perhaps leave a mark of the 150th anniversary of the school for future generations and to that end the buildings that we are proposing would have a particular architectural style, a particular architectural look and feel so that is very clearly of our period."
